Our Home "Riverview,"
Is for sale. Mr. Elliott and family are to vacate it May 1st, and it is larger than we can occupy to advantage. It is by far the best home in this city and it is hard to duplicate (everything considered) in the United States for the money it costs. The site is superb. It embraces ten full city lots 4 by 8 rods. The house and barn are everyway right. It is worthy the attention of any one seeking a first class home. As we before said, we will sell it and will give possession May 1st.
We have an an architect working on plans for a smaller but equally good house, to be built for ourselves directly opposite "Riverview", and if we can sell this we shall have it built to occupy by July 15th.
This is an unusually attractive opportunity. Come and see us.
Yours very truly,
GEO. L. & SARAH H. CARRINGTON.

Our Home Journal
"The Home" has been a source of much pleasure to us and that it has not been of much profit in way of money, cuts no figure. But owing to the fact that we are driven in our other lines of work and that we are to lose the editorial assistance of Mr Elliott, we have concluded to abandon the publication of the same. Friends who have paid for 1891 can have their quarter by calling at our office. Thanking our readers and promising that they shall hear from us frequently in some form, we are

SLAIN BY A CRAZY SON

An Indiana Mother Murdered on Her Sick Bed

THE LAD ALSO COMMITS SUICIDE.

A Sad Story from Bloomington, Ind.—A Telegraph Operator Beats His Mother and Kills Himself at Anderson, Ind.

MURDERED BY HER BOY.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., April 4.—Ward Demaree, 22 years of age, living with his father and mother and two sisters and two brothers on Sixth street in this city, on Friday afternoon cut the throat of his aged mother, who lay sick in bed with the grip, and then cut his own throat from ear to ear, each dying instantly. At the moment when the young man sent his mother's and his own soul into eternity there was in an adjoining room a Miss Green, a boarding student of the State university, and the 8-year-old sister of the matricide and suicide, but they didn't hear a sound of the shocking deed going on so near them. Upon going into the sickroom they were horrified to see Mrs. Demaree with her head nearly severed from her body lying dead in a pool of blood and Ward Demaree in a like condition on the floor.

Demaree had been a college student for some time and had been studying languages preparatory to attending Princeton college. At the time of the tragedy an older daughter was absent at school and the mother lay upon the bed sick. Two smaller children were about the house. The mother, seeing that her son had a razor in his hand as he approached her bedside, motioned the children from the room. Ward approached his mother's bedside and with one slash of the razor nearly severed her head from her body. The son, after looking at his fiendish work a minute or more, knelt on the floor and with the same bloody weapon cut his own throat. The bed and floor presented a ghastly spectacle to the excited people who soon crowded into the room. The tragedy was enacted in the heart of the city. All parties are highly connected. The family knew of the son's aberration of mind, but had kept the matter a profound secret.

TERRIBLE RESULT OF A SPREE.

ANDERSON, Ind., April 4.—Friday at noon Ed Alexander, a telegraph operator, beat his aged mother into insensibility, and, under the impression that he had killed her, swallowed a lot of poison and then shot himself inflicting a slight wound. He died at 5 o'clock from the effects of the poison. He was to have been married next Wednesday.

HORROR IN A MINE.

Ten Men Killed by an Explosion in an English Colliery.

LONDON, April 4.—A disastrous explosion in a coal mine took place at Apedale, Staffordshire. Ten persons were killed outright and several others were severely injured. The bodies of the dead miners have been extracted from the portion of the mine where the explosion took place. The cause of the disaster is supposed to be the presence of air-damp in the mines, and the fool-hardiness of one of the miners after the presence of the dangerous gas was first discovered.

Acquitted on the Ground of Insanity.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 4.—Charles Meyers, who killed James E. Weir in Independence January 1, 1888, for purpose of robbery, was acquitted on the plea of insanity. The jury was out thirty-six hours. This was Meyers' second trial. The first jury found him guilty. When the jury rendered its verdict the prisoner's attorney fainted from surprise and emotion. Meyers will be sent to the insane asylum.

WISCONSIN DEMOCRATS.

Annual Banquet of the Juneau Club at Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, April 4.—The annual banquet of the Juneau club, the leading democratic organization of Wisconsin, was given Friday night. The two stars, Gov. Peck and Senator John M. Palmer, of Illinois, were absent, the former owing to sickness in his family and the latter because he was busy in Chicago. There were present men from every section of the state and all the men who are wont to be called on when campaign funds are needed were on hand. It was nearly 8:30 o'clock when the banquet opened. President John L. Mitchell, arm in arm with Gen. John C. Black, of Illinois, marched to the big dining hall. Behind them came the flower of the Wisconsin democracy over 300 strong. Prior to the relapse to toasts President Mitchell made a short address explanatory of the absence of Gov. Peck and John M. Palmer. He also read a number of letters of regret, among them being letters from William F. Vilas and W. C. P. Breckinridge. The first toast on the revised programme was "The Tariff, which was responded to at length by John D. Warner, of New York. "The Party of Political Reform" was the toast responded to by Gen. Black, of Illinois, "The Young Democracy" was the theme of Bradley G. Schley, of this city, and Gen. Doe, of Janesville, responded to the toast originally down for Gov. Peck—"Our Co-Workers in the Democratic Cause." "The Iroquois Club of Chicago" was responded to by W. G. Ewing, of Illinois. All the speakers were warmly applauded and the enthusiasm was sustained from start to finish.

A SUDDEN CALL.

Associate Justice Taylor, of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, Dies During a Fit of Violent Coughing.

MADISON, Wis., April 4.—Associate Justice David Taylor, of the Wisconsin supreme court, died suddenly Friday night. He had only been troubled with a severe cough, for which a physician had not been consulted. At the supper table to-night he was seized with violent coughing, which became so alarming that a physician was summoned, but he died before the doctor arrived. Judge Taylor was over 70 years of age and was elected to the supreme bench of the state in 1878. His term would have expired in 1896. The election of a successor to Chief Justice Cole, whose term expires next year, occurs next Tuesday. A successor to Justice Taylor cannot be elected at the same time, as it is too late to file the necessary nomination papers. His successor will therefore be appointed by Gov. Peck.

EAGER FOR REVENGE.

More Riots Expected Among Pennsylvania Cokers

STRONG FORCE OF TROOPS ON GUARD.

Despite Their Presence, an Outbreak Is Almost Certain to Occur Within a Few Hours — Alarming Reports.

UNDISMAYED BY THE MILITIA.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Pa., April 4.—Quiet reigns throughout the coke region. No outbreak has occurred since the fatal raid Thursday morning and, while the situation is still grave, the presence of the militia has had a reassuring effect upon the people. Two regiments are now upon the ground fully equipped and prepared for action. The Eighteenth regiment with over 500 men reached here shortly after midnight, and the Tenth regiment with nearly as many more men arrived upon the scene a little later. Adjutant General McClelland and Brigadier General Wiley are in command and will remain as long as there is any danger of another raid.

The funeral of the victims will take place Saturday. Peter Wise, master workman of the Knights of Labor, says the entire coke country will turn out and that about that time the people must take care. He says the burial of the dead will furnish renewed incentive for the activity of the living.

A prominent leader of the Slav element stated that a majority of the crowd out on Thursday morning was there under protest; that the American, English and Irish leaders went to Standard and forced the Slavs to join them under threats of punishment.

Notwithstanding the prevailing quiet, wise ones say the trouble is not ended. It is the calm before the storm. The leaders are fighting for position and power; the men are fighting to maintain them in their positions and for what they claim is principle. The leaders of the district are all busy at the inquest. They and their attorney, James S. Beacon, are watching the proceedings with unceasing vigil. They believe they see in the tactics of prosecuting the deputies and managers a great coup and they will pursue it to the end. This work, however, will claim only a portion of their attention; there is other work to be done.

While the troops in this neighborhood will command peace, other places are unprotected. With the strikers' knowledge of the by-ways and short cuts of the country they can reach a point and complete a raid even before the cumbersome militia could move.

The dead foreigners will be buried to-day with much pomp and ceremony. They are called martyrs. Ten thousand men will follow the coffins to their graves. Secretary Parker has issued notices to every worker in the region to attend the obsequies at Scottdale. The bodies, followed by workmen from the Mount Pleasant branch railroad, will go to Scottdale by a special train. Eighteen cars have been ordered for this purpose. At Scottdale the workmen will be joined by others from every plant in the region. The funeral will call together a larger number of men than ever gathered together in this region. The procession will proceed to the cemetery, where all the leaders will make orations, the character of which may be easily imagined.

Col. Hawkins, in command of the Tenth regiment, says that so far as his investigations go Capt. Loar was perfectly justified in firing on the strikers at Morewood, and that he should strongly advise that the militia be kept in the region until the strike is over and quiet restored.

Gen. Wiley detailed Private Kellar, of the Eighteenth regiment, who is a proficient linguist, to circulate among the Hungarians and other strikers and learn their moods and what, if any, schemes were on foot. Friday he reported to Gen. Wiley as follows:

"There is going to be trouble between this and Monday. The strikers are all indignant because the soldiers have been sent here, but don't seem to fear them. I was in two houses where they threatened to attack me until I spoke to them in their own tongue. In one house I saw five guns and a number of revolvers. In the other I saw three guns and several revolvers. Five out of every ten of these men have served in the armies of the old country, and they know what soldiers are. They say that the soldiers who have been brought here are simply workmen like themselves, and will not interefere with their movements. In one of their papers that I picked up was an article saying they need not be afraid of the militiamen, who were novices and did not know any more about warfare than the strikers themselves. They also know about all the members of the Tenth regiment and I heard them ridiculing them. So far as I have discovered there is going to be trouble, and it will come within the next two days. All of the Hungarians are in a dangerous mood over the killing of their fellow workmen at Morewood, which they claim was entirely unjustifiable."

Every precaution is being taken by the military to avert any further trouble. Private Kellar's warning has created a great deal of excitement, and sentinels are now being placed at every point where trouble might be expected.

The statement further shows that while the Chinese population of the state as a whole has decreased by 8,451 since 1880, there has been an increase in the Chinese population of the county of San Francisco since that time of 4,125.

ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

There are many points worthy of careful consideration in the circular signed "Friends of Dr. St. John," which was put upon the street today. Tax payers have little need to be reminded that Mayor St. John's administration has been careful and economical. His action upon the license question comes up with especial force at this time. Mayor St. John recognized the fact that saloon keepers have sold and would sell at wholesale, although they declined to take out a wholesale license, sold to them, "knowing this I require you to take this wholesale license," and forty-three of them complied, paying two hundred dollars each. Now, what did this accomplish? First, it most effectually prevented forty-three saloon keepers from violating the law by selling at wholesale without a wholesal license. Second, and perhaps of more importance to the tax payers, it put eight thousand six hundred dollars into the city treasury and lessened the taxes just that much. In other words by that official act Mayor St. John contributed over eight thousand dollars to the tax payers of the city, and paid more than one-fifth of the annual city tax. What this sum would do if applied to specific funds is shown in the circular as follows:

Applied to the gas fund it would light the city without costing the tax payers one penny, and leave two thousand six hundred dollars in the city treasury to be applied to some other fund. It would reduce the cost of maintaining the city schools to the small sum of fourteen hundred dollars. It would pay all the bonded debt fund (except eleven hundred dollars.

Will the tax payers reject such material, practical benefit as this? Will they by their votes make it necessary to increase the tax levy of this year over last, eight thousand, six hundred dollars? Will the elect a mayor that costs the tax payers eight thousand, six hundred dollars? Will they shut the door of the treasury against this amount? Will they pay eight thousand, six hundred dollars for a party candidate?

What has Dr. St. John suddenly done which leads certain people, backed by a newspaper which has always urged upon the people the importance and desirability of electing him mayor to object to him? He is the same man, no less honest, just as good a mayor, but he is a candidate because a number of citizens, of both parties, asked him by signing a call instead of being the candidate of a party convention. Will the citizens of Janesville reject him on this account?

The distress of a London paper over the trouble between the United States and Italy is amusing on account of the expressed reason for its distress. It says: "The agitation will vastly strengthen the hands of those who are wanting to forbid the further landing of emigrants. When they succeed, the export of ruffians and paupers from Europe generally will be diverted to our shores."

The Madison democrats will have hard work to convince people that Dr. Anderson's plan was not meant for a gerrymander. The doctor's claim is that 'we have done the best for the democrats that it is possible to do—the democratic vote cannot be spread out so thin as to reach all over the state and carry districts.' This claim does not go well with the Democrat's profession of non-partisanship.

Not long ago Hon. Jerry Simpson boasted to his constituents that such luxuries as socks were unknown to him. Now that he is in New York he puts up at a six dollars a day hotel and his former supporters think of reading him out of the church.

Dr. O. P. Robinson's election means $8,600 additional tax to the people of Janesville. Democrats begin to realize that the election of a party candidate is hardly worth that much money.

Is Dr. O. P. Robinson as mayor worth $8,600 a year more to the city than Dr. St John?

The tax of each property owner will be increased exactly one-fifth if Dr. O. P. Robinson is elected mayor.

THE "POSSIBLE" CASES.

really did not know what I ought to do, but I had sense enough left to feel sure that the fish had been attracted into the cavern by my lamp. Obviously, the right thing to do was to extinguish it, but the very thought of this nearly drove me into a frenzy. I could not endure to be left alone with the shark in darkness and water. It was an insane idea, but I felt that whatever happened I must keep my eyes upon him.

Now the great fish began to swoop nearer and nearer to me, and then, suddenly changing its tactics, it receded to the most distant wall of the cavern, where, with its head towards me, it remained for the first time motionless. But this did not continue long. Gently turning over on its side, it opened its great mouth, and in an instant, with a rush it came directly at me. My light shone full into its vast mouth, glistening with teeth, and there was a violent jerk which nearly threw me from my feet, and all was blackness. The shark had swallowed my lamp! By rare good fortune he did not take my hand also.

Now I frantically tugged at my signal rope. Without my lamp I had no thought but a desire to be pulled out of the water, no matter what happened. In a few minutes I sat divested of my diving suit and almost insensible upon the deck of the schooner. As soon as I was able to talk I told my astonished comrades what had happened, and while we were discussing this strange occurrence, one of them looking over the side saw, slowly rising to the surface, the body of a dead shark.

"By George," he cried, "here is the beast. He has been killed by the current from the battery."

We all crowded to the rail, and looked down upon the monster. He was about ten feet long and it was plain that he had died for making himself the connection between the poles of the battery.

"Well," said the captain presently, "I suppose you are not going down again?"

"Not I," I replied, "I give up this job."

Then suddenly I cried:

"Come boys, all of you. Make fast to that shark, and get him on board. I want him."

Some of the men laughed, but my manner was so earnest that in a moment they all set about to help me. A small boat was lowered, lines were made fast to the dead fish with block and tackle, and we hauled him on deck. I then got a butcher's knife from the cabin, and began to cut him open.

"Look here, Tom," exclaimed the captain, "that's nonsense. Your lamp's all smashed to pieces, and if you get it out, it will never be any good to you."

"I don't care for the lamp," I answered, working away energetically, "but an idea has struck me. It's plain that this creature had a fancy for shining things. If he swallowed a lamp there is no reason why he should not have swallowed anything else that glittered."

"Oho!" cried the captain, "you think he swallowed the bracelet, do you?"

And instantly everybody crowded more closely about me.

I got out the lamp. Its wires were severed as smoothly as if they had been cut by shears. Then I worked on. Suddenly there was a cry from every man. Something glimmered in the dark interior of the fish. I grasped it and drew it out. It was not a bracelet, but a pint bottle, which glimmered like a glow worm. With the bottle in my hand I sat upon the deck and gazed at it. I shook it. It shone brighter. A bit of oiled silk was tied tightly over the cork, and it was plain to see that it was partly filled with a light colored oil, into which a bit of phosphorus had been dropped, which on being agitated filled the bottle with a dim light.

But there was something more in the bottle than phosphorus and oil. I could see a tin tube, corked at each end, the exposed parts of the corks spreading enough to prevent the tin from striking the glass. We all knew that this was one of those bottles, containing a communication of some sort, which are often thrown into the sea and float about until they are picked up. The addition of the oil and phosphorus was intended to make it visible by night as well as by day, and this was plainly the reason why it had been swallowed by a light-loving shark.

I poured out the oil and extracted the tube. Wiping it carefully, I drew out the corks and then from the little tin cylinder I pulled a half sheet of note paper, rolled up tightly. I unrolled it and read these words:

"Before I jump overboard I want to let people know that I killed John Polhemus. So I have fixed up this bottle. I hope it may be picked up in time to keep Jim Barker from being hung. I did think of leaving it on the steamer, but I might change my mind about jumping overboard, and I guess this is the best way. The clothes I wore and the hatchet I did it with are under the woodshed back of Polhemus' house.

HENRY RAMSEY."

I sprang to my feet with a yell. Jim Barker was my brother, now lying in prison, under sentence of death for the murder of Polhemus; all the circumstantial evidence, and there was no other, had been against him. The note was dated eight months back. Oh! cruel fool of a murderer.

The shark was thrown overboard, and we made best speed to port, and before the end of the afternoon I had put Ramsey's note into the hands of the lawyer who had charge of my brother's case.

Fortunately he was able to identify the handwriting and signature of Ramsey, a man who had been suspected of the crime, but against whom no evidence could be found. The lawyer was almost as excited as I was by the contents of this note, and early the next morning we started together for the house of the Polhemus family. There under the woodshed we found carefully buried a blood-stained shirt and vest and the hatchet.

My impulse was to fly to my brother, but this my lawyer forbade. He would take charge of the affair, and no false hopes must be excited, but he confidently assured me that my brother was as good as free.

Returning to the city, I thought I might as well make my report to Signora Rochita. The lady was at home and saw me. She showed the most intense interest in what I told her, and insisted upon every detail of my experiences. As I spoke of the shark, and the subterranean cave, she nearly fainted from excitement, and her maid had to bring her smelling salts. When I had finished she looked at me steadily for a moment, and then said:

"I have something to tell you, but I hardly know how to say it. I never lost my bracelet. I intended to wear it at the captain's dinner, but when I went to put it on I found the clasp was broken and as I was late I hurried to the table without the bracelet, and thought of it no more until, when we were all waving and cheering, I glanced at my wrist and found it was not there. Then, utterly forgetting that I had not put it on, I thought it had gone into the sea. It was only this morning that, opening what I supposed was the empty box, I saw it. Here it is."

I never saw such gorgeous jewels.

"Madam," said I, "I am glad you thought you lost it, for I have gained something better than all these."

"You are a good man," she said, and then she paid me liberally for my services. When this business had been finished, she asked:

"Are you married?" I answered that I was not.

"Is there anyone you intend to marry?"

"Yes," said I.

"What is her name?" she asked.

"Sarah Jane McElroy."

"Wait a minute," said she, and she retired into another room. Presently she returned and handed me a little box.

"Give this to your lady-love," said she; "when she looks at it, she will never forget that you are a brave man."

When Sarah Jane opened the box there was a little pin with a diamond head, and she gave a scream of delight. But I saw no reason for jumping or crying out, for, after having seen the signora's bracelet, this stone seemed like a pea in a bushel of potatoes.

"I don't need anything," she said, "to remind me that you are a brave man. I am going to buy furniture with it." I laughed and remarked that "Every little helps."

When I sit with my wife by my side, before the fire in our comfortable home, and consider that the parlor carpet, and the furniture and the pictures, and the hall and stair carpet and all the dining-room furniture with the china and glass and the linen, and all the kitchen utensils, and two bedroom suits on the second story, both hard wood, and all the furniture and fittings of a very pleasant room for a single man, the third story front, were bought with the pin that the signora gave to Sarah Jane, I am filled with profound respect for things that glitter; and when I look on the other side of the fire and see Jim smoking his pipe just as happy as anybody, then I say to myself, that if there are people who think that this story is too much out of the common I wish they would step in here and talk to Jim about it. There is a fire in his eye, when he tells you how glad he is that it was the shark instead of him, that is very convincing.

Can These Things Be?

The chief French surgeons and medical professors have for some time been carefully studying the effects of mesmerism on the female patients of the Salpetriere hospital, and M. Babinski, a clinical surgeon of that establishment, has effected a series of experiments which would seem to open up a new future for medical science. In proving that certain hysterical symptoms could be transferred by aid of the magnet from one patient to another, he took two subjects, one a dumb woman afflicted with hysteria, and the other a female who was in a state of hypnotic trance. A screen was placed between the two and the hysterical woman put under the influence of a strong magnet. After a few moments she was able to speak, while the one in the hypnotic trance was rendered as dumb as the hysterical woman had been. Luckily for the healthier patients, these transformations were only temporary.

CHILDREN

Are always liable to sudden and severe colds, to croup, sore throat, lung fever, etc. Remedies, to be effective, must be administered without delay. Nothing is better adapted for such emergencies than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It soothes the inflamed membrane, promotes expectoration, relieves coughing, and induces sleep. The prompt use of this medicine has saved innumerable lives, both of young and old.

"One of my children had croup. The case was attended by our physician, and was supposed to be well under control. One night I was startled by the child's hard breathing, and on going to it found it

Strangling.

It had nearly ceased to breathe. Realizing that the child's alarming condition had become possible in spite of the medicine it had taken, I reasoned that such remedies would be of no avail. Having a part of a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child three doses, at short intervals, and anxiously waited results. From the moment the Pectoral was given, the child's breathing grew easier, and in a short time it was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well to-day, and I do not hesitate to say that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved its life."—C. J. Wooldridge, Wortham, Texas.

Coming to Janesville.

Mrs. J. Hibbard will be at the Myers House, Tuesday, April 21. All people afflicted with any form of blood disease can consult her free of charge.

Mrs. J. Hibbard, the subject of this illustration, who is 65 years old, lost her nose and upper lip from the effects of a blood disease. Since recovery she has worn an artificial nose and upper lip, and made a specialty of manufacturing the remedy that cured her, which is called "Hibbard's Herb Extract."

Although she is well-to-do-herself, she is greatly interested in the sufferings of others and is untiring in her efforts to alleviate human suffering. She has visited the principal cities of the world, always accompanied by her three sons, and despite her terrible affliction, she is not objectionable in appearance, as might be supposed, but on the contrary she has a very kind and motherly face. She charges nothing for advice, and her forty-five years of experience may be of benefit to anyone afflicted with any disease she claims to cure such as cancer, scrofula, salt rheum, skin eruptions and blood diseases generally. This will be the only opportunity offered of ever seeing her in Janesville. The Herb Extract is for sale by Prentice & Evenson.

MORTAR-SPOTTED SKIN

Covered with Scales. Awful Spectacle. Cured in Five Weeks by the Cuticura Remedies.

About the 1st of April last I noticed some red pimples like coming out all over my body, but thought nothing of it until some time later on, when it began to look like spots of mortar spotted on, and which came off in layers, accompanied with itching. I would scratch every night until I was raw, then the next night the scales being formed meanwhile, were scratched off again. In vain did I consult all the doctors in the country, but without aid. After giving up all hopes of recovery I happened to see an advertisement in the newspaper about your Cuticura Remedies, and purchased them from my druggist, and obtained almost immediate relief. I began to notice that the scaly eruptions gradually dropped off and disappeared one by one, and have been fully cured. I had the disease thirteen months before I began taking the Cuticura Remedies, and in four or five weeks was entirely cured. My disease was eczema and psoriasis. I recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all in my vicinity, and I know of a great many who have taken them, and thank me for the knowledge of them, especially mothers who have babes with scaly eruptions on their heads and bodies. I cannot express in words the thanks to you for what the Cuticura Remedies have been to me. My body was covered with scales, and I was an awful spectacle to behold. Now my skin is as nice and clear as a baby's.

A Reversed Judgment.

By ROBERT C. V. MEYERS.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

CHAPTER IV.

She felt the touch of lips.

The judge had not spoken since she entered the room except to whisper her name. Every word she said smote him; his long experience had given him many instances of women wronged by men. Here was a woman as deeply wronged by a man as she could be—and the man was himself. All that she was he had made her; the wreck of all that should have made her other than she was; her wretched married life, her husband's downfall, her nephew's disgrace, her own torture that should last as long as she—he had done it all. What misery of soul had been hers since that day when she had stood before him and asked him if he wished to marry her! Her love for him had made this ruin—and he had loved her and wronged her love. She had always been fair to look upon; she would have been beautiful with other environments than had been hers, more beautiful than his wife; the education she had gleaned somehow or other, her dignity of speech, could not he himself have brought it about and molded her into a brilliant woman? She had loved him, and her love for him had wrecked her and all those nearest her. Did his wife love him? Had not ambition, rather than passionate affection, brought her to him; had not ambition, rather than the maternal feeling of this woman for her nephew, made his wife anxious for this match between Estelle and John Elwyn?

Believe her! To doubt her would have been to exculpate himself. Believe her! Though the woman watching him may have thought him only cold and callous.

"What!" she cried. "Do you hesitate? Do you feel that nothing is my due? Have I not sufficiently accused you?"

With a despairing gesture she threw herself at his feet. Believe her!

"No, no," she said pleadingly, "I do not accuse you—you are innocent, the whole world is innocent, only I am not. I came to you because I am not quite dead, and the affection that made you its idol holds to this child of my adoption with all the tenacity that availed it so little of old. I loved you once, and that should be something to you. I ask for something for my dear boy, as I ask you to screen me for his sake from justice. Will there not be sufficient punishment for me when it is always before me that I send him to prison and must withhold the truth from him? I—I"— She could say no more. She kneeled there with uplifted pallid face.

And the judge!

"Salome!" he said—nothing more. But the agony, the remorse, the grief in that word were apparent to her who heard.

She looked at him, her life surely concentrated in that look. Then she rose to her feet and tottered, and he put out his arm to support her.

"Oh, Salome! Salome!" he said.

He held her thus a little while, and from the adjoining room came the low murmur of happy voices, while from the wall looked down upon him the pictured eyes of his wife. The face of the woman he held had undergone a strange alteration. What years of privation and repression had wrought still remained there, but it was as though a soft light had flooded down over brow and eyes.

She disengaged herself from him, and he took the roll of papers he had written that evening, crushing it in his hand.

"To-morrow," he said, "I place in the hands of your nephew's employers the amount of the money that is missing. My word will be taken for whatever I shall say. And—I will have the sentencing of your nephew! I can say no more."

"He will know the truth," she cried in sudden terror; "my boy will know what I did."

"When you tell him."

"And you say that you will have the sentencing of him. You mean that you will make his sentence light?"

"Yes—the lightest."

"Do you know that people will blame you for that? They will call you unjust; and then there is your chance of being governor; may not that be weakened by what you would do?"

She still thought of him and his welfare despite her own great pain. His eyes were looking into hers, his face came nearer her wan cheek; she heard his troubled breathing, and then she felt the touch of lips she had not felt since she was a young, passionate girl.

"Robert!" she said softly, and he put his hands up over his eyes and knew that she went from him, without another word, without another look.

Half an hour later the judge's wife rustled into the study. She was radiant.

"Asleep?" she said brightly, going to the table where her husband sat. "Then wake up and let me tell you how glad I am that Dunlap woman came when she did. For when I went to Estelle and John they had been having a little tiff, which I quickly patched up, and the reconciliation, as all reconciliations will do, led to far greater tenderness than before. John will speak to you tomorrow, and Estelle is in the seventh heaven. "Why," she said as he raised his face, "how old you look. It is all that Dunlap case, and"——

"Will you leave me?" he said in a dominating tone of voice hitherto unknown to her.

"Mercy!" she smiled. "You are angry because I helped to expedite matters a little with Estelle and John?"

"I am not angry," said the judge. "But I should like to be alone. I—I have a troublesome matter to think of."

She leaned over and put her lips to her husband's forehead.

"I had forgotten your letter to Gen. Wayne in regard to the nomination," she said. "I am so happy on account of Estelle and John that I forget everything. Go on, my dear; apres moi le deluge—after the capital of the state, the cabinet, governor!"

She went from the room humming.

In the room beyond the music was resumed; from outside came the jingle of a car bell. The pictured eyes of justly celebrated men—had there been no romance in the lives of those men?—looked down as asking the occupant of the room by what right he should assume the prerogative of the higher position offered him, while the eyes of his wife demanded by what right he should refuse any prerogative offered him. But the judge heeded no fancied question, heeded no question he himself might have asked. He sat there motionless, while the voice of his daughter sang a song of love and truth to the man who loved and trusted her.

THE END.

And Mamma Frowned.

He hadn't seen her for a long time, and of course they had an infinite deal of nothing to say to each other. Little sister, therefore, was very much de trop.

"Run along up stairs, dear," she said to the little one. "I'll give you some candy if you will."

"I don't want to."

"There's a good girl. Please do."

"But I'd rather stay here."

"I won't let you come into my room while I'm dressing if you don't."

But even this direful threat had no effect, and little sister remained. Presently mamma came in and the conversation lagged a trifle. Suddenly a thought struck little sister.

"Say," she asked, "what did you want me to go up stairs for a while ago?"—Chicago Post.

People Who Used to Eat Spiders.

The enjoyment of particular kinds of food is after all a matter of custom, and the African who revels in white ants is no more peculiar in his tastes than the European who eats cheese mites. A lady whom M. Reaumur knew was accustomed to devour spiders as fast as she could catch them, and a German lady gave it as her opinion that these creatures resembled in taste the most delicious nuts. A fellow countryman of this lady was in the habit of regularly hunting spiders in his own and his friends' houses. He used to spread them on bread, Rozel tells us, and vowed that they were far pleasanter to the palate than butter.—Cornhill Magazine.

Criticism of Two Cities.

A New York and a Boston girl were lately discussing the comparative merits of their respective towns. "You love New York," said the Boston girl, "as the pianist loves his piano. There are parts of it that he doesn't think much about. But we love Boston as a violinist loves his violin. He knows every grain in the wood as he hugs it up under his arm, and feels it to be all a part of himself."—Boston Traveller.

One Opinion.

"I think," said Willie, looking up through the chimney flue, "that Santa needed his claus to get up through there."—Harper's Bazar.

No Enjoyment.

"Did you enjoy the play, Ethel?"

"No, I didn't cry once."—Judge.

A CASE OF CATARRH.

IN THE THIRD STAGE CURED—TEN YEARS A VICTIM OF CATARRH AND PERMANENTLY CURED.

A TREATMENT THAT NEED NOT FAIL IN REACH OF ALL.

If cases like the following can be cured, certainly there is hope for all. This patient had been growing worse in spite of all treatment for ten years, and had reached that terrible condition known as the third stage of catarrh (atrophic catarrh). The offensive breath, and dry scabs forming in the nose, cracking in the ears, describe a condition which is considered by most physicians as hopeless. The case is given in the words of the patient:

CLINTON, Mich., March 21, 1891.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus O.—Gentlemen: I had been troubled ten years with chronic catarrh, gradually growing worse from year to year. I tried all the treatments and remedies I heard of without any relief. My symptoms were dry scabs forming in the nose, dropping from the back part of the nose into the throat, sore throat, nose stopped up, offensive breath, and cracking and roaring in the ears. I began to take your remedy on the first of November, 1889, and in twelve months I was perfectly cured. I used no local treatment, but used only your medicine internally. I have had no return of my catarrh, and consider myself perfectly cured.

H. D. WALTER.

It would be difficult to describe a worse case to cure than the above. The length of time it had run, the fact that it had continually grown worse, and the further fact that it had already developed the symptoms of the dry, or atrophic, stage of catarrh of catarrh, combine to make this a very remarkable cure, quite impossible to be made with the ordinary treatment.

The cure was effected by internal treatment alone, and no spray, gargle or inhalent was used. The case began to improve as soon as the medicine was begun, and in six months every symptom had disappeared, but the medicine was continued a few months longer for fear they would return. This man has been exposed during the past winter to the changeful climate of Michigan, and has not had the slightest return of any catarrhal symptoms. Not a month passes but that hundreds of similar cures are made by the internal use of Pe-ru-na unassisted by other treatment.

The only reason that there are any failures are either because the catarrh is complicated by some organic disease or the patient does not take the medicine long enough. The majority of people expect to be cured in a week or two of catarrh that has run ten or fifteen years. Such people are nearly always disappointed. Pe-ru-na will cure a recent case of acute catarrh in a few day or weeks, but when the disease becomes chronic it takes longer.

Colds, winter coughs, bronchitis, sore throat, and pleurisy are all catarrhal affections, and consequently are quickly curable by Pe-ru-na. Each bottle of Pe-ru-na is accompanied by full directions for use, and is kept by most druggists. Get your druggist to order it for you, if he does not already keep it.

Edwin Booth, so well known to his intimate friends as a companionable man and racy talker, once said to a friend in Detroit: "People generally look upon me as a recluse and seem to think me an unhappy and grumpy fellow. The fact is, I have long been a sufferer from dyspepsia, but that's a small matter and concerns only myself. It's not true that I seek seclusion, but I'm getting along in years, and while I am always glad—not passively and tolerably, but pleasurably glad—to have my friends drop in and take pot-luck with me, I can not spur myself to the performance of conventional social duties. The fact is, I have exhausted all my topics of conversation, and don't know what on earth to say to strangers or formal callers."

It is now known that the finest wheat land in the world and suitable for all small grains and fruits and in many instances cotton are

In North and West Texas

Texas farmers have an enormous home market as well as for their surplus crop. Here farmers are able to work out of doors every day in the year, and stock run on grass from January to January. Many farmers in Kansas and in the north-west are selling whatever equity they have in their farms, buying the cheap lands of Texas, and in many instances clearing the price of the land from their first years crops. The latest census shows that few farmers in Texas have their farms mortgaged. The Texas school fund is the largest of any commonwealth in the world, aggregating in cash and lands some sixty millions of dollars. State taxes are ten cents on the hundred dollars.

A BIG HOLE IN THE SEA

A Diver Hunted a Diamond and Was Hunted by a Shark—A Piscatorial Explosion and a Singular Outcome—Jim's Startling Experience.

The first of the "Possible Cases" series is presented to Gazette readers this evening. It will be followed on succeeding Saturdays by contributions from Jules Verne, H. Rider Haggard, Julian Hawthorn, Edgar Fawcett, Guy de Maupassant and others. Mr. Stockton's narrative follows:

In the fall of 1888 the steamship Sunda, from Southampton, was running along the southern coast of Long Island, not many hours from port, when she was passed by one of the great British liners, outward bound. The tide was high, and the course of both vessels was nearer the coast than is usual—that of the Sunda being inside of the other.

As the two steamers passed each other there was a great waving of hats and handkerchiefs. Suddenly there was a scream from the Sunda. It came from Signora Rochita, the prima donna of an opera troupe which was coming to America in that ship.

"I have lost my bracelet," she cried, in Italian, and then turning to the passengers she repeated the cry in very good English.

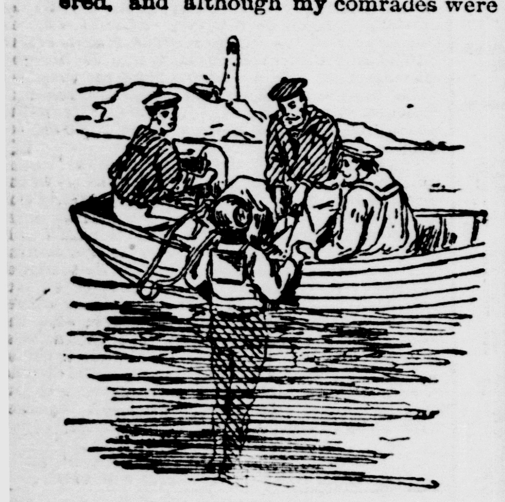

The situation was instantly comprehended by every one. It was late in the afternoon; the captain had given a grand dinner to the passengers, at which the prima donna appeared in all her glories of ornamentation, and the greatest of these glories, a magnificent diamond bracelet, was gone from the arm with which she had been enthusiastically waving her lace handkerchief.

The second officer, who was standing near, dashed into the captain's office, and quickly reappeared with chart and instruments, and made rapid calculation of the position of the vessel at the time of the accident, making an allowance for the few minutes that had passed since the first cry of the signora. After consultation with the captain and recalculations of the distance from land and some other points, he announced to the weeping signora that her bracelet lay under a little black spot he made on the chart, and that if she chose to send a diver for it she might get it, for the depth of water at that place was not great.

By profession I am a diver, and the next day I was engaged to search for the diamond bracelet of Signora Rochita. I had a copy of the chart, and, having hired a small schooner with several men who had been my assistants before, and taking with me all the necessary accoutrements and appliances, I set out for the spot indicated, and by afternoon we were anchored, we believed, at it, or very near it. I lost no time in descending. I wore, of course, the usual diver's suit, but I took with me no tools, nor any of the implements used by divers when examining wrecks, but carried in my right hand a brilliant electric lamp, connected with a powerful battery on the schooner. I held this by an insulated handle, in which there were two little knobs, by which I could light or extinguish it.

The bottom was hard and smooth, and lighting my lamp I began to look about me. If I approached the bracelet I ought to be able to see it sparkle, but after wandering over considerable space I saw no sparkles nor anything like a bracelet. Suddenly, however, I saw something which greatly interested me. It was a hole in the bottom of the ocean, almost circular, and at least ten feet in diameter. I was surprised that I had not noticed it before, for it lay not far from the stern of our vessel.

Standing near the rocky edge of the aperture, I held out my lamp and looked down. Not far below I saw the glimmering of what seemed to be the bottom of this subterranean well. I was seized with a desire to explore this great hole running down under the ordinary bottom of the sea. I signalled to be lowered, and although my comrades were much surprised at such an order they obeyed, and down I went to the well. The sides of this seemed rocky and almost perpendicular, but after descending about fifteen feet, they receded on every side, and I found myself going down into a wide cavern, the floor of which I touched in a very short time.

Holding up my lamp, and looking about me, I found myself in a sea cave of some thirty feet in diameter, with a domelike roof, in which, a little to one side of the center, was the lower opening of the well. I became very much excited; this was just the sort of place into which a bracelet or anything else of value might be expected to have the bad luck to drop. I walked about and gazed everywhere, but I found nothing but rocks and water.

I was about to signal to be drawn up, when above me I saw what appeared to be a flash of darkness coming down through the well. With a rush and a swirl it entered the cavern, and in a moment I recognized the fact that a great fish was swooping around and about me. Its movements were so rapid and irregular, now circling along the outer edge of the floor of the cavern, then mounting above me till its back seemed to scrape the roof, that I could not form a correct idea of the size of the creature. It seemed to me to be at least twenty feet long. I stood almost stupefied, keeping my eyes as far as possible fixed upon the swiftly-moving monster.

Sometimes he came quite near me, when I shuddered in every fiber, and then he shot away, but ever gliding with powerful undulations of his body and tail, around, about and above me. I did not dare to signal to be drawn up, for fear that the terrible creature would enter the well hole with me. Then he would probably touch me, perhaps crush me against the wall; but my mind was capable of forming no plans. I only hoped that the fish would ascend and disappear by the way he came.

My mind was not in its strongest condition, being much upset by a great trouble, and I was so frightened that I

What Dr. Robinson's Election Means To Janesville

HAS DR. ST JOHN CHANGED?

Two Years Ago He Was Good Enough To Be the Candidate of Those Who Oppose Him—He Is Now on the Same Footing as Then.

The suggestion is made that to elect Dr. Robinson mayor, would cost the city $8,600 a year. It is urged that the satisfaction of a party victory is not worth that much to the voters of either party. The circular is signed "Friends of St. John," and reads as follows:

"Much political dust usually surrounds election contests, and it is well to exercise in dissipating it the business common sense which we generally call to our aid in our every day affairs. Let us briefly examine the issues presented, and inquire how far and in what way they effect us as citizens of Janesville. A man has been called upon by a large number of people to be a candidate for the office of mayor. He is a man who has grown up in our midst; a good citizen, a good neighbor, a good friend, honest beyond suspicion, no respector of persons, without vanity, always kind to the poor and ready to assist them with his skill, experienced in public affairs. This is the man who has consented to be the people's candidate. Several times mayor of the city, he has always fulfilled the duties of the office to the satisfaction of the entire people. Now, what is the objection to him? What has this man suddenly done which leads certain people, backed by a newspaper which has always urged upon the people the importance and desirability of electing this same man to the same office whenever he has been a candidate, what has he done, we say, that certain people, and this newspaper should object to him. Well, they say first, he is not running on the democratic ticket. He is the same man, no less honest, just as good a citizen, would make just as good a mayor, but he is a candidate because a number of citizens, of both parties, asked him by signing a call, instead of being the candidate of a party convention. Will the citizens of Janesville reject him on this account? Will they declare their intention to defeat every candidate in the field by the request of the people? Newspapers can afford to do this, men cannot. Party pride sometimes leads voters to urge the election of the party candidates as against one of the opposite party, but here there is no such issue. Mayor St. John is the candidate of no party, only the candidate of the people, and if elected there will be no party victory for either side. All parties will be represented by the mayor, who was a candidate for all. The manner, therefore, in which he became a candidate, instead of being objectionable, is an argument in his favor, for it leaves him free to act for the benefit of all.

"This being the only objection to mayor St. John let us inquire whether there are any reasons in his favor.

"While his general career would recommend him to the people for re-election there is one official act which of itself ought to insure his success.

"His action upon the license question not only settled a vexed question but resulted in much benefit to the taxpayers.

"Mayor St. John recognized the fact that saloon keepers have and would sell at wholesale, although they declined to take out a wholesale license, and he said to them, "knowing this I require you to take this wholesale license," and forty-three of them complied, paying two hundred dollars each. Now what did this accomplish? First, it most effectually prevented forty-three saloon keepers from violating the law by selling at wholesale without a wholesale license. Second, and perhaps of more importance, to the tax payer, it put eight thousand six hundred dollars into the city treasury and lessened the taxes just that much. In other words by that official act Mayor St. John contributes over eight thousand dollars to the tax payers of the city. By that act he paid more than one-fifth of the annual city tax. That tax amounts to about forty thousand dollars, for eight thousand six hundred of that the mayor gave a receipt to the people by compelling saloon keepers to do their business as the law requires. He paid by that act, one-fifth or 20 per cent of every tax payer's assessment. Every tax payer who went to the city treasurer's office during the last year found one-fifth of his tax paid. If he paid sixteen dollars he would have paid twenty if the mayor had lacked the courage to ask as he did. Again there are seven seperate funds raised by the city taxation, namely:

General fund	$2000 00
Highway and bridges	1 00 00
Gas	5000 00
Water and fire department	6000 00
Library	2000 00
Bonded Schools	10000 00

"If the money placed in the treasury by the official act referred to, were applied to the gas fund it would light the city without costing the tax payers one penny, and leave two thousand six hundred dollars in the city treasury to be applied to some other fund. So with the other funds. It would reduce the cost of maintaining the city schools to the small sum of fourteen hundred dollars. It would pay all the bonded debt fund except eleven hundred dollars. Will the tax payers reject such material, practical benefit as this? Will they by their votes make it necessary to increase the tax levy of this year over last, eight thousand, six hundred dollars? Will they elect a mayor that costs the tax payers eight thousand, six hundred dollars? Will they shut the door of the treasury against this amount of money? Will they pay eight thousand, six hundred dollars for a party candidate? These figures are hard, cold facts; they can be verified at the city treasurer's office. Of course these funds are levied each year; the amount of this license fund is not applied to any one of them, but it goes into the treasury and reduces the total amount of the levy just that much. It has been asserted that it goes to the county, but such is not the fact. Fifty dollars of each retail license is paid to the county, but not one dollar of the wholesale license money goes to the county. These facts alone are sufficient for the tax payers of the city, and must determine the direction of their votes.

"It is perfectly understood, of course that the party candidate, Dr. Robinson, is opposed to the double license, and will not require it, hence, the policy of the two candidates is submitted to the voters.

A Glance at the Candidates on the Republican City Ticket.

City Clerk	BART H BALDWIN
School Commissioner	D. P. SMITH
Street Commissioner	GEORGE HANTHORN
Justice of the Peace	J. W. JONES
City Sealer	MILO PALMER

Bart. H. Baldwin is a veteran of the late war. He served his country faithfully and well on the battle field; was a prisoner of war for months and endured the privations and starvations of southern prison pens, including Andersonville. He has been a resident of Janesville since the war, and for years has been yardmaster for the Chicago & Northwestern. Everybody knows him; and the people can do no better than to elect him city clerk.

D. P. Smith has been engaged in business in this city for years being at the time a member of the firm of Smith & Gateley, dealers in coal, wood and ice. He is careful and painstaking in his own private business, is well qualified for the position and will honor his constituents in the school board.

George Hanthorn is a man every body in the city knows. He makes friends everywhere, and once made he retains them. He is at present filling the office which the people propose to again elect him. He has performed all the work the common council has laid out for him, and has accounted for every expenditure of public funds for which he is accountable. The indications are that he will be re-elected by a handsome majority, in which case he will continue to perform the duties of his office in a like satisfactory manner as heretofore, making his report to the common council as the law directs.

J. W. Jones is familiar with the duties of the office of justice of the peace having performed the duties several terms while a resident of the town of Union. Republicans should give him a full vote.

Milo Palmer is the man to elect sealer of weights and measures. He is an old resident of the city, and for years has been one of Janesville's industrious carpenters. He understands the duties of the office, and will perform the duties fearlessly and honestly. No one is better qualified than he for the position. Put your little "X" mark opposite his name on your ballot on Tuesday.

Railroad Notes of Interest in Janesville

NEW TOWN NEAR EDGERTON

The Milwaukee & St. Paul Bridge Below the Dam Made Safe by Additional Piling—Many Passes To Be Had for the Asking—A Big Engine.

The Bridge Made Safe.

All danger of the new Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad bridge being carried away by the high water is past. Additional piles have been placed in position, and no trouble is expected. The piles, though driven with great difficulty, serve to stay the long bridge and relieve the pressure on the piling in a large degree. The men having charge of the work report that the bridge is now perfectly safe, and the rocking motion has almost ceased.

Sixty Tons of Engine.

The big engine that has been tending the construction train on the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul bridge, attracts a good deal of attention. It is a ten wheel Mongul, and weighs nearly sixty tons. The big engine pulls the heavy Chicago freight that comes up every morning, and is called the "Chicago engine" by the railroad men. Frank Slater has had charge of it during the work on the bridge.

Passes Are Plenty.

Conductors on the Milwaukee & St. Paul trains say that passes were never so numerous as now. "Of one hundred and sixty-two passengers that got on a train going north thirteen only had tickets," remarked one paste-board taker. "Why, we almost hit a man who insults us with a ticket."

New Station Near Edgerton.

The St. Paul railway has been asked to establish at a flag station at Hanerville midway between Edgerton and Stoughton. The petition has received a long list of signers. Mail has for a number of years been taken and thrown at Hanerville, but the proposition now is to have all regular trains stop when flagged.
